

Our Bear Came Out of Hibernation

Description

Thanks to the below freezing cold here in Texas, we had to bring out the bear for our walk today. I donâ€™t have a problem with the bear, just the reason we have to bring it out.

I love putting Avery in this thing, I just want to pick her up and hug her tight (but enough to breathe) forever! Just lookâ€™.

Lots of room to grow in here!

She didnâ€™t mind being stuffed in her bear suit and the Baby Bjorn (really need a better carrier and canâ€™t decide on the Ergo, Boba, or Onya) with my winter jacket zipped over her, she just chewed on my coat for a while and finally fell asleep. I find it hard to stop walking if sheâ€™s still sleeping, so after a quick pee break at the house, I journeyed back outside to âœbearâ• the weather. See what I did there? Ha.

Seriously, no more picturesâ€¦!

Today was going pretty well until later in the afternoon when Avery started having bad gas and screaming fits. I know it was gas since she was busting out burps and farts that put me to shame! I feel it has to do with how she takes the bottle sometimes and Iâ€™m trying to make sure she gets as little air gulped in as possible. But with a squirmy baby, this is not an easy task.

Before the gas

After nap time in her crib was disrupted, I ended up holding her in the rocking chair until she fell asleep again. She was in and out along with the audible gas passing through our poor baby, but at least she got a little more rest.

Once Kelley got home, she took her and was able to feed her the good stuff sans bottle, which helped with the gas problem. I also gave her some Tummy Calm which Iâ€™m not sure if it helps or not, but it doesnâ€™t make things worse.

So, I guess Mondayâ€™s can suck for the At-Home crew just as much as the working force! Itâ€™s Monday night as I write this and weâ€™re hoping for a peaceful, gas-free night. Crossing fingers!

Have you ever used Tummy Calm or another homeopathic for your baby?

Howâ€™s the weather in your area? Do you like it hot or cold? Iâ€™m a heat lover way more than a cold lover; let me sweat!

Date Created

2014/03/03