

This Is Dangerous To Do With Her Now #TBT

Description

Throwback Thursdays (aka #TBT) typically create many feelings all at once that go full circle. Sadness from realizing how fast time goes, humor from how funny you or someone you know might've looked, happiness from seeing how much your little one has grown, and right back to sadness because your little one has grown.

Exactly one year ago today, I published a post titled Baby Steps to Baby's First Steps where we were holding Avery as she did "the cat walk" across our kitchen island. Guess it wasn't the safest thing then either.

So she wasn't exactly taking steps, or walking...ooooh even crawling at that point, but it made her happy and that's what mattered most. Plus, we had fun with this nightly routine.

But now, if we were to try and hold her across the island as she walked on her OWN, the results could be detrimental! We sometimes hold her just sitting on the island and she quickly shows us how unsafe it is when she grabs at everything around her, including whatâ€™s in our hands!

Like most toddlers, sheâ€™ll grab at whateverâ€™s in sight.

And, like most toddlers, she gets extremely pissy when we wonâ€™t let her have whatever object she is going for. Lately, that object is Going Momâ€™s phone.

Over the course of just one year, her craziness level has gone fromâ€¦ â€¦.toâ€¦.

Sheâ€™s the best! I love her and Kelley more than words (even the dictionary) can describe!

April 2014

April 2015

How much growing has your kid done over the course of a year?

What else has happened for you since last April?

Date Created

2015/04/23