There are approximately six million car accidents in the United States every year; therefore, even if you are a particularly diligent driver, accidents happen. In the event of an accident, it is essential that your vehicle is proven and tested to be safe for adults and children alike. It is the driver's responsibility, whether mother or father, to look after their children and keep them safe. While providing a safe and stable environment for travel is the most important element to consider when choosing your next family vehicle, affordability is also crucial. Affordable payments, insurance, and competitive fuel mileage should be near the top on the checklist of things to consider when purchasing your next vehicle.

SUV: Safe Utility Vehicle

Luckily, U.S. News compiles an annual categorized list of the best family vehicles. Their award-winning formula for choosing the best vehicles includes professional reviews, safety and reliability ratings, cargo space, comfort, and the availability and function of family-friendly features. Over one hundred vehicles were examined and reviewed across a variety of categories, and the Honda CR-V was awarded best compact sport utility vehicle.

The SUV is, in itself, a safe utility vehicle because of the all-wheel drive function. This feature promises a higher safety rating in rough terrains and climates. Dads will feel comfortable and safe behind the wheel on all roads, whether they are gravel-covered in construction zones or when snow, rain or ice covers them. The Honda CR-V will give parents the confidence they need to keep their children safe, regardless of the climate or terrain, because their vehicle's all-wheel drive transmission system ensures the safest handling in all conditions, whether industrial or environmental.

Safety and Affordability

The average base price in the United States for a 2018 Honda CR-V is 25,000 dollars. While this vehicle is more expensive to buy and insure than many others, particularly smaller cars, it's satisfaction and safety ratings make it fairly priced. The moment you and your family climb into your new vehicle you will immediately recognize the safety the vehicle provides to both you and other road users, as well as superior levels of comfort. This will make it worth your while to dig a little deeper into your pockets and find a good price and competitive monthly rates.

The CR-V has a five-star safety rating, a 9.7 expert ranking and an 8.3 consumer rating. Most vehicles equipped with all-wheel drive systems are slightly higher in fuel mileage because all of the wheels are turning, causing the vehicle to work harder, burning more fuel; however, this vehicle is top of its class in fuel mileage. This does not mean that it has better fuel mileage than smaller cars, but it is particularly efficient when compared to other SUV's with all-wheel drive systems.

Safety is the number one priority when purchasing a new family vehicle. While an SUV may be more expensive than a smaller car, it has a safer handling system, collision rating, and the cargo space and leg room to be comfortable for the whole family. This combination makes the Honda CR-V a particularly good choice for your families next vehicle.
