

Dear Demon: We Want Our Daughter Back

Description

Have you ever considered the possibility of demons inhabiting your child and that's what makes them cry at glass-shattering decibels?

I mentioned how Avery has started to really "hit the high notes" in my 7 Memories post (it was the bonus memory, number 8), and she's only getting louder. Why oh why do they do this?

That's a rhetorical question, please don't actually answer.

Unless you know for sure...do you?

She's in the prime age for teething and both Going Mom and I are confident that this, coupled with her increasing neediness, are the culprits. But, you can never rule out the possibility of demon possession; right?

How else can you explain having a baby with all of their needs met, but the instant you even think about setting them down, they begin their shrill, demon-like cries?

Luckily, we are loving parents and show her our love regardless of demon possession or not. But I wonder if when I'm feeding a bottle, if I'm feeding my baby or a demon.

Gives me goosebumps. Poor girl, she's going to hate me posting this all over the internet, but I capture raw footage of possible demon possession in Avery. Watch it and let me know what you think?

[youtube <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-tdI5FP3CoQ&w=560&h=315>]

Maybe blowing raspberries really is the best way to remove demons and that's the actual reason babies do it on a daily basis. Hey, maybe.

So, Demon, if you're reading this, please leave our daughter and go with your demon friends elsewhere. We don't like your kind around here; consider this your one and only warning.

This post is part of the Love All Dads Link Up Party, check out other cool dad bloggers by clicking the button below and enjoy!!

Date Created

2014/06/19