

Our Crazy Awesome Future in Blogging

Description

When I first started blogging, it was for Just Add Cayenne, where I went about sharing my life along with healthy recipes, fitness tips, and other health related topics fit in. Then I started this crazy awesome blog, Going Dad (I won't deny that I'm biased), to basically do the same thing.

But instead of life as an accountant who really really really is into health and fitness, I shared life as a stay-at-home dad wanting to have a way to capture life as my daughter, Avery, and wife, Kelley, all learn and grow together.

I've enjoyed writing about all of the memories we've already had in just the 2 years of Avery's life, but I've also been trying too hard to write about everything which is becoming increasingly hard. This little girl is doing more than I can keep up with to gather and share on the blog anymore. Even she's getting tired of my usual memory "tracking" method.

Normally, I jot down the things she does/says on random pieces of paper I have around the house, but it got to where I was trying to write down something new every other minute. Which meant I was totally losing track of just enjoying the freaking moment/entire day!

I could go on, but I'm sure you get the drift. So, here's my new plan for the blog!

As Avery gets older and can actually communicate with real words, I'd like to have her help to do product/service reviews. I will also do reviews that only parents/health-minded people would be into since I obviously take a major interest in the health and fitness world.

Why should you, the reader care if all you want is to see our darling daughter and hear what she's been up to? Well, hopefully you'll find what I review of good use in your life and you'll gain insight on things you may never have known existed otherwise.

I've already performed several reviews on here, but now I can focus on doing more. In addition, I plan on sharing recipes I create, workouts I love or put together, healthy lifestyle hacks, or just favorite foods you can buy online. Yes, that means I'll have more affiliate links that will earn me a whopping few cents if you click on them.

I have nothing to hide, I'm hoping to earn a little extra cash if possible because, let's face it, we could all use more. Right?

This most likely means less blog posts, but I do enjoy sharing random facts/funny things I find entertaining, so be on the lookout there. Damn Pinterest really knows how to suck you in, and before you know, you have eleventy-billion new pins when all you wanted was a picture of a cat!

On the topic of social media such as Pinterest, I'll still be sharing plenty of life happenings with Avery and my wife on Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram, so be sure to follow these if you don't already to keep up to date if you care. Seriously, why wouldn't you want to see this crazy-haired cute kid?

If youâ€™re some creepy guy, Iâ€™d rather you not, but I hope everyone else will follow along and will find what I have to offer useful. Be on the lookout for reviews covering a multitude of things from items for kids and parents, to anything surrounding the world of health and fitness. Just know, I WILL NOT try products I feel are not safe or worth even using, and will give my honest opinion on what I do try.

As the days, weeks, and months pass, Iâ€™ll be making updates to the looks and other aspects on here, so check back often. Please?

What do you think of this new blogging approach?

Is there anything youâ€™d personally like to see reviewed first?
