

Surfing in the Kitchen

Description

She just turned 15 months old and she's already moving on to bigger and better things. Like, for instance, surfing in the kitchen.

It's everything you'd see a real surfer (please note: I have absolutely no clue about surfing) do when out catching the waves. Starting with paddling out away from the shore.

Then it's time for action as she gets in her goofy footed stance and acts as if she's taking the drop down the face of a gnarly wave.

But, oftentimes she gets a little too daring while carving the other direction and will eat it.

No worries, though, it takes more than that to dampen this girl's spirit! She just shrugs it off with a cheesy, close-eyed shimmy smile and prepares to try again.

Awwww, bummer! Itâ€™s flat; no waves!

Thatâ€™s it for surfing today, but the party has just begun. She just hangs up the wet suit and gets to dancing all night day long.

What kind of unconventional activities usually done outdoors does your kid bring inside?
