

Is it wrong to Take Toys from the Birthday Girl?

Description

Hey, remember when it was July? What happened?!

I remember as a kid I'd try to squeeze in the last days of freedom before the looming school year began, but now everything just runs together. #lifeasaparent

On the topic of kids, we brought Avery to her first party this past Saturday for our neighbor's little girl who turned 1. They have an older girl who just turned 4 and were celebrating that day too. For the older kids (and adults), an awesome bounce house was setup and getting a lot of use.

I can't wait to get in a bounce house with Avery, but we decided to give the swing set a try. This was Avery's first time in a swing, and as you can see in this video, I'd say she enjoyed!

View this post on Instagram

A post shared by RC Liley (@going_dad)

The one year old party scene was not as “bounce-housey” with only Avery and another baby from the neighborhood who will be 1 next weekend, but they were all adorable and fun to watch nonetheless. I can see these three getting into trouble years from now.

Avery’s attempt to keep cool in front of the older babies was thwarted when the sight of a camera got her excited. The birthday girl is in the middle, and the soon-to-be birthday girl is on the right.

We are grateful to have such good neighbors around us, and everyone had a great time at the party. Since the birthday girl is walking on her own now, there were a couple “walker” toys that have become obsolete in their house. Avery, on the other hand, took to liking one the sit-to-stand one, so our gracious neighbors sent us home with that and another walker!

Not too bad. Go to a party for someone, and leave with their stuff; that’s a win in my book! The rest of the weekend was spent with Avery effortlessly pulling herself up on everything and enjoying the new toys. I’ve thanked the already, but I want to thank our neighbors again for being so kind and letting us use these while Avery learns to walk.

I could go on, but I’ll let the pictures of Avery playing on her “new” walkers do the talking.

And here's a video of her smiling proudly as she stands on her own.

View this post on Instagram

default watermark

A post shared by RC Liley (@going_dad)

How was your weekend?

Have you ever attended someones birthday party and left with awesome gifts for yourself or kid?

Have a great week!

Date Created

2014/08/04