

Happy Motherâ€™s Day! Letters to my Wife & Mom

Description

Happy Motherâ€™s Day to all of you wonderful Moms out there!

If youâ€™re not a wonderful Mom, this doesnâ€™t apply to you, but hopefully thatâ€™s not the case. Itâ€™s well known Iâ€™m not giving flowers for Motherâ€™s Day \(or ever\), but Iâ€™m good at creating handmade cards for special occasions, just like the one I made Kelley last year.

Well, I guess Iâ€™m giving myself too much credit, huh?

This year I opted to type my letter and nix the whole "thumbs up" cut-out. This not only saved me time since I was writing with toddler pulling on my shorts (not kidding) and needed someone to push her toy plane, Tilly, as mentioned in the letter to Going Mom.

At the time of this being published, my wife and I should be done with our runs and hanging out with my mom and Avery at Brewed where copious amounts of coffee will be consumed. Iâ€™m sure Kelley and I will be the winners of the race happy to be done so we can relax and enjoy spending time with each other on Motherâ€™s Day.

Speaking of, Iâ€™m cutting this short and will leave you with the letters I wrote to my wife and to my mom. So much better than words from a mass produced card!

Kelley,

Iâ€™m standing here, at my work station with our crazy little girl at my feet demanding my attention as I write this. Oh, hold on!

Okay, had to make Tilly go takeoff, Iâ€™m back now.

Anyway, there are times when I feel like I could go absolutely insane from these things. You know the feeling since she does it to you too. But, despite the madness, when all is said and done, I unquestionably love it!

If it werenâ€™t for you, none of this could be a reality, and I am forever grateful to you as a beautiful, magnificent, and loving mother and wife! Youâ€™re my best friend with whom I can share all my thoughts and feelings, and although I admit I donâ€™t do it enough, I feel instant comfort when Iâ€™m in your arms.

Youâ€™ve rocked at being a mom and are still going strong with giving Avery the best stuff ever. I know it will come to an end eventually, and I support whatever choice you make, but the sacrifice you have made will live forever in our healthy little girl.

I could go on raving about your awesomeness, but Tilly needs to takeoff for the sixth time, and I have 3 half books piled up to read. Basically, I love, I love our life, and I appreciate you as a mother to our beautiful girl and as my stunning (sexy vixen?) wife.

Happy Motherâ€™s Day, dear, I love you forever!

Mom,

Iâ€™m writing this at the same time as Kelleyâ€™s, with Avery dancing around me for my utmost attention. You know, just like I was. ðŸ™, Thank you, by the way, for always giving it to me!

Youâ€™ve always been there for me, even when on your own and going through so many stressful times. To have a mother like you is rare, and I love that you are now giving all of your love to Avery without hesitation. She has the best G-Ma ever and it makes me smile seeing you two together. Even when sheâ€™s tugging at your hair.

I found this picture from after high school graduation and since itâ€™s not being used here, hopefully you will have a place for it at work or at home. It makes me think of how much weâ€™ve all changed, but never made us distant from each other. Again, thank you for always being there for me and now for Avery. No one could ask for a better mother than you, especially one that puts up with my crap!

Sorry for the lack of gifts, you deserve so much, but instead I ask you watch our kid so I can run. Which, by the way, thank you for that!

I hope you have a very Happy Mother's Day, and we spend it all together enjoying each other's company.

Do you create a lot of handmade gifts or prefer to buy your gifts?
