

Our Baby Caught on Video: Standing and Watching Ninja Turtles

Description

If you follow me on Facebook, Twitter, or Instagram, you might of seen the several posts I made with Avery and Ninja Turtles. Since Going Mom, who I am sad to say despises the shelled mutants, was out of a town for a few days, I took the opportunity to expose Avery to the classic cartoons I grew up with.

Oh man, I canâ€™t explain the awesome wave of nostalgia that overwhelmed me just as the theme song started playing! Iâ€™m hooked, again, and from what Iâ€™ve seen so far, Avery might be too. Or maybe itâ€™s just the flashy, colors emitting from the TV. Nahhhh

Now that my wife is back home, we there hasnâ€™t been any TMNT action to watch, but hopefully the egg has been planted in Avery and sheâ€™ll look forward to the next time we can watch an episode or two. Of course, play time and getting outside will always be stressed the most and is top priority. I love the turtles, but they wonâ€™t help keep us healthy. Unless, for some reason, our lives are suddenly threatened by Shredder and his half-wit minions Bepop and Rocksteady.

Yep, Iâ€™m a TMNT nerd, and damn proud!

Anyway, Going Mom has been sick since she came home and Iâ€™ve been trying to care for her in hopes she gets well soon. I made the first soups of the season and both were graciously consumed by my weary wife. Crossing my fingers she running at full throttle soon!

I think Avery might help by showing Mommy how she can stand on her own. After several attempts, we finally got her to stand for longer than half a second! Exciting times in our house, I know! Hereâ€™s the video, hope you enjoy and have a great Saturday.

Do you and your spouse/partner have disagreements on what to watch and/or show your kids?

How do you or did you work with your kids to get them standing and walking?
