Baby Wearing and Peeing

Description

Câ€™mon, I know other dads out there do this. I mean, you canâ€™t interrupt a perfectly sleeping baby just because you really have to go. Or maybe youâ€™re at the store; what else are you to do?

Still, no matter how many times Iâ€™ve done it already, it is awkward trying to pee while wearing Avery in our Baby Bjorn sling. For one thing, her legs are long enough now to give my arm one good kick and make me miss my target. At home, this isnâ€™t so bad, but in public, it could lead to criticism or just dirty looks. So what!? A guyâ€™s gotta do what a guyâ€™s gotta do. Agreed?

Iâ€™m sure as she grows older (and heavier), wearing Avery and peeing will prove more difficult, but Iâ€™ll deal with that as the time comes.

Avery Crying with Arms Flailing. A common sightâ€¦

In other events, Avery had a major cryfest last night and Kelley and I could not figure it out. Gas did not seem to be an issue, she had a clean diaper, and wouldnâ€™t feed anymore. It took several hours of Kelley holding and trying to calm her, a little time with me holding and singing random songs on the fly, going back to Kelley for a while, and then just laying on me squirming until she finally gave into sleep. Then she slept for almost 8 hours straight!

The sleeping part was nice, but still not worth it what she did beforehand. Weâ€™re hoping for a better run tonight; fingers crossed!

Only two more work days for daddy (me) before I start my new job as a stay-at-home dad. I have major nerves circulating my brain and body, but Iâ€™m excited nonetheless. Trying to figure out a schedule and a way to get in exercise which I so greatly depend on for sanity will be hard, but hopefully not futile.

Luckily, my workouts are in the garage and not running long distance as in the past, so hopefully thatâ€™s a plus on my end.

Any other dads out there have a certain way to deal with peeing while wearing your baby?
What about working out? I figure Iâ€™ll try while sheâ€™s asleepâ€¦if Iâ€™m not wearing her!
