

The Bear is Back, But Where is Our Baby?

Description

It's been 9 long super fast months since experienced really cold weather here in Texas, and it's rearing its ugly head once again. I like the heat, if you can't tell, so I'm less than thrilled to say goodbye to my garage sweat sessions. Now I'll be huddled next to our space heater trying to keep warm with Avery before a garage workout!

When the cold came in a couple days ago, Avery's bear suit came out. I shared a post about our experience with the bear suit last February and March, and Going Mom and I couldn't get over how freakin' cute she was in the thing!

Free Bear Hugs!!

The floppy, over-sized arms and legs were just un-bearable and all you wanted to do was hug and squeeze (gently) her all day!

But now, it was a bit more difficult trying to get Avery in the same bear suit. Aside from being sized 3 "6 months (oops!), her activity level has increased approximately 500% over the course of 9 months. Guess it's similar to development in the womb!

So, it â€œfitâ€•, but Iâ€™m pretty sure her mobility was compromised a bit. Just so you know, I only kept it on her for the duration of our cold walk, and then it came right off once back inside. That said, she didnâ€™t complain one bit while we walked, and she actually seemed quite content chewing on her paws.

Although she still didnâ€™t seem all that thrilled to be in the tight-fitting bear skinâ€¦.

Sorry, dear, but itâ€™s much better than your lips turning blue. Like the did later that day. Double oops!

We just placed an order on Amazon for a new bear suit from the same brand, just bigger size and canâ€™t wait for it to get here. Judging from the pic above, Iâ€™m thinking Avery is anxious for its arrival too.

Since itâ€™s her birthday in 2 days, Iâ€™ve been doing a lot of reflecting on the past months and thought it would be neat to do a side-by-side collage of Avery in the bear suit back in February to 9 months later in Novembear (just getting my corny dad jokes warmed up!).

Kelley is off today and tomorrow to get things ready for Avery's birthday party and hopefully Avery will take her first steps while Mommy's home too. We've been saying she's going to walk soon for the past 3 months, but hey, you never know!

Have you ever tried cramming your kid in clothes that just won't fit anymore?

What do you think about the cold? Love or hate?

Date Created
2014/11/13

default watermark