

A Personal Opening Day + Puns for the Occasion

Description

Upon the publishing of this post, I am preparing for my personal “opening day”™ in a few hours. No, I™m joining a Major League Baseball team (how cool would that be?), I™m literally getting opened via incision in my right shoulder to release my entrapped suprascapular nerve.

Yeah, that atrophy thing I wrote about a couple months ago will hopefully be on its way to getting rectified with this surgery. Going Mom will be my escort to and from the hospital as G-Ma stays home to watch darling little girl. Whom, by the way, just took one big bittersweet step in growingup-ville with her new Naturepedic big kid bed.

It doesn™t seem that long ago when I wrote about our first days of putting her in the crib. Seriously, this parenting thing takes a major emotional toll! I guess on the bright side, snuggling with her for a nap will be much easier than it was in the crib.

Anyway, wipes tear from eye back on track now. The surgery will be an outpatient procedure, so I get to go home the same day. Hopefully the anesthesia doesnâ€™t make me too crazy or anything. Iâ€™d hate for Avery to see Daddy in some weird altered state that scares her or something. I might go crazy from lack of food alone since thereâ€™s no eating or drinking (even water) after midnight the night before and my opening day procedure doesnâ€™t start until almost noon.

Iâ€™ve always been a fan of fasting, so at least itâ€™s not a new thing to endure. And no getting the area wet for three days after means I wonâ€™t have a real shower until Saturday, but Iâ€™ll be sure to soak in a bath. Youâ€™re welcome, wife. ðŸ™,

Once Iâ€™m able to get back in the groove of things, I have a little week long vacation to the Outer Banks I want to write about. Until then, I guess Iâ€™ll just depend on my trusty standby content of puns. And why not? Theyâ€™re freakinâ€™ awesome. Even the ones that elicit a sickly groan still bring a smile to the faceâ€¦usually.

Since doctors, hospitals, and other medical areas are on the mind, today's puns will be in these categories.

- I had to drink food coloring after losing a bet. Luckily, I'm not sick, but I feel like I've dyed a little inside.
- Listening to a brain surgeon and anaesthesiologist talk is mind numbing.
- They tried to save him with an I.V. but it was all in vein.
- An editor went to the doctor for help with his poor circulation.
- The brain surgeon refused to take no for an answer, so I gave him a piece of my mind.
- Two surgeons were joking about sutures and had each other in stitches.
- A pediatrician is a doctor of little patients.
- My hematologist said my outlook is good since I'm a B Positive type.
- A doctor drank while putting on patients' casts. He was soon plastered.
- A surgeon's comments are incisive remarks.
- After 5 years with the same chiropractor, I had to change doctors. It was quite an adjustment.
- I couldn't decide which of two physicians to see. It was a paradox.
- It was really crowded at the diet doctor's office but then it thinned out.

Date Created
2016/06/22