

Our First Night Without Avery “ Part 2

Description

Everyone survived another “first” in our household! We enjoyed our time together away from home and G-ma handled the night like a pro. I guess she does have some experience with two grown children. If you didn’t read Part 1 of the story, here’s the link.

Ready for the night!

Kelley and I started our night by picking up Chipotle (I had the salad bowl with black beans and Kelley had the burrito bowl with barbacoa) and buying some beer and gas station nearby. Four dollars for one sub-optimal beer at Chipotle? No Thanks! We had a refreshing Amber brew from a local brewery for less than half the price per bottle. Score!

Still classy b/c we used napkins.

We then trekked over to the parking lot at the concert to enjoy a romantic, bean-filled, dinner under candle lamp light in the car. The beer was tempting us and we were ready to enjoy a celebratory cheers, but we forgot a bottle opener. Being the smart, college-educated people we are, I utilized my belt buckle and had the beer opened after a few tries.

No funny thoughtsâ€™!..

Food and booze finished, we headed inside to see the Imagine Dragons. We arrive over an hour after everything started, so we saw the last of the cover band and waited for the Imagine Dragonsâ€™™ stage to be setup. To kill time, we obviously took random pictures.

My prized lip curl. G-ma can do it too!

The concert itself was great. We heard all of the songs that turned us into fans and had me thinking back to our puzzle days while trying to get pregnant. Good times. We're not crazy people and our seats were pretty high, so it was nice just to enjoy the show and listen to the music.

Meanwhile, G-ma, was having a good time playing with Avery who was being better than expected. Go Avery! My mom said after bath time she did her usual loud crying since she apparently hates when it's over, but it wasn't too bad.

G-ma tried to keep her up a little longer thinking her bed time was later and said she was just so tired by the time she put her down. Guess we forgot to mention her bed time was actually earlier! oops!

By the time we arrived home at the late hour of 11:30, both G-ma and Avery were asleep. G-ma was on the couch and we woke her and visited while the Olympics were on. I also gather more food to eat, but that's a given.

Overall, we had a great time, and I think our romantic dinner in the car was really the highlight of the date. I could go for just another "date" night by going to another parking lot for dinner and beer. I'm sure this makes all the ladies jealous!

G-ma said she's happy to do it again, so I guess I just need to find a good parking lot. Oh, and Avery has to agree too. You think she agrees?

I'd say that's a YES!

Ever find that the little things really make a big difference when enjoyed with someone you love? Any stories to share of your own?

Date Created
2014/02/22