

Jumping With Friends at Altitude Trampoline Park

Description

When the local Altitude Trampoline Park offers a discount for toddlers, you jump on it! Last week, our friends/neighbors asked several of us parents if weâ€™d like to get the kids together for a little jumping action (aka increased naptime success), and there was no way I would say no to this cutie.

default watermark

Itâ€™s not a major concern to Going Mom and me right now, but sometimes we wonder if Avery gets enough social interaction with peers. With me staying at home, we obviously avoid daycare and/or nannies. We love our situation and wouldn't change it for the world, but know she needs her time with others. Luckily, she has plenty of peers in our neighborhood and they all get along pretty well.

When together, they seem to keep to themselves and interact every now and then. I expect this is normal for 2 and 3 year olds and will change as they get older. At the trampoline park, they showed more interaction than I've seen with Avery in a while and I loved watching them play.

These balls of energy scoured the whole facility but kept gravitating to this trampoline ramp (tramp ramp? No?) to use as a slide. Belly sliding was the thing that day.

Once down, they would scamper right back up to go down again. Yes, thatâ€™s it, use that energy!

I always try to interact with these kids when we see them in the neighborhood, but they usually just hide behind a parent while shooting unwelcoming facial expressions my way. Natalie, who just had a birthday at Altitude Trampoline Park, simply dropped to the ground and curled into a ball as I smiled at her. I got the hint.

The other girl, Emma, started off shy but we ended up playing a lot after she warmed up. By play, I mean she pushed me off the edge of things and jumped on my back to attack me. It was fun though. One of the boys, Tanner, was constantly running laps around the area, but he gave some great high fives. Something about the boys at this age, most of them just are not as shy.

Without a doubt, the best playmate is and always will be my precious little girl.

She played a lot with the other kids, but made sure to save a little playtime with Daddy too. I appreciate the time with her and know this time won't last long, so making the most of it is vital. I think she enjoys our time too, at least that smile says so.

Once she finds out what dating is, her feeling might change. But lets not talk about that nowâ€¦..or for a loooongggg time.

Heading to Altitude Trampoline Park is fun whether it's just us or with friends, but hopefully we'll get a group together again soon!

Date Created
2016/08/31

default watermark