

17 Month Photo Session: No Go With The Bow

Description

This is the second month weâ€™ve had to push off Averyâ€™s monthly photo session. Last month, my wife and I had a date night paint night (King Kong even made an appearance), and this month Avery was too ill for us to subject her to pictures in the chair.

Once our little girl was back in action and running wild, we knew it was time for her photo session. Sheâ€™s still not eating right and itâ€™s obvious her current teething is the culprit. Poor kid, canâ€™t catch a break.

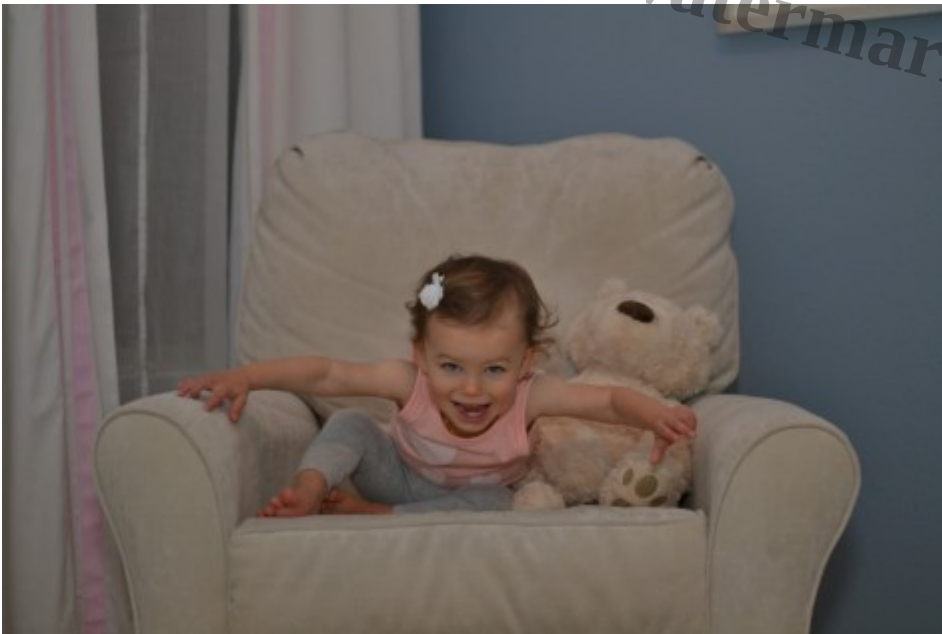

I have to hand it to her though, aside from her stubborn eating, she bounced back from her fever rather fast and wonâ€™t let anything slow her down. She made sure to make her photo session difficult just to prove that sheâ€™s not sick anymore and we canâ€™t just take pictures as we please like I did the other day. Taking her away from the book she was â€œreadingâ€• probably didnâ€™t help eitherâ€¦

But thatâ€™s what parents do, right, we annoy the hell out of our kids. The first setup seemed promising and Avery put up a front as if sheâ€™d cooperate.

But not a second later, she was lunging forward with her crazy face.

It became obvious this session would be added to the another one of those categories, so we just managed with what we had. Basically, just a lot of re-positioning.

The only time she held still was when she was pulling on the bow in her hair.

Which, of course, led to it coming off.

Kelley only had to put the bow back on, ohhhhhh, eleventy-billion times.

Which only made Avery increasingly interested in the little white thing clipped to her hair. Maybe it would be something good to eat?

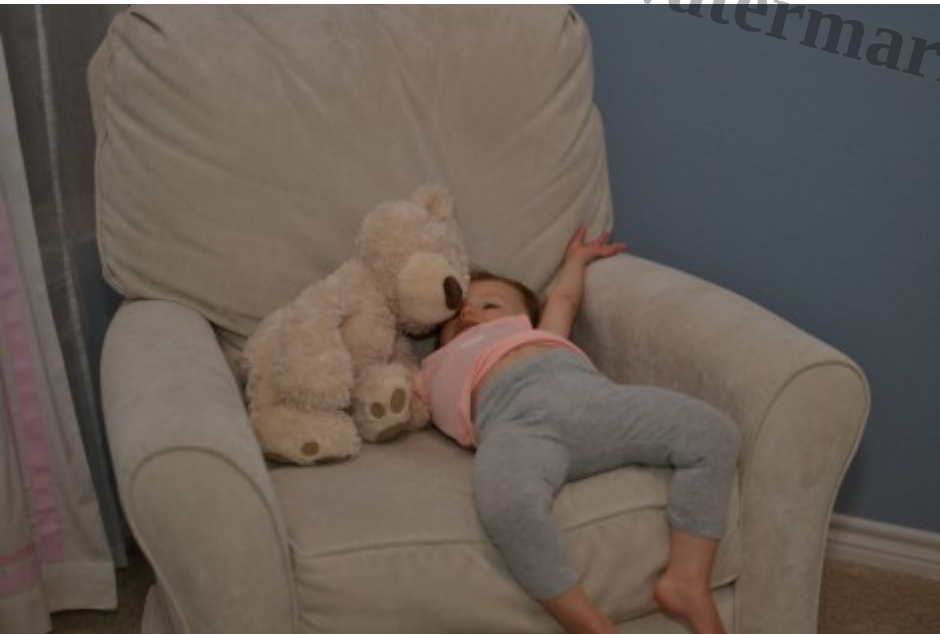

Nope, maybe handing it to Daddy would be better.

Or maybe Iâ€™™ll just hold on to it and give a quick pose.

Guess that was all we got, because things went “downhill” from there!.

And hey, whatâ€™s with this bow always getting stuck on my head?!

So that was our photo session for her 17 month mark. I know thereâ€™s a lot of changes occurring each day in our growing girl, but does that mean sheâ€™ll be better or worse for her 18 month session?

I donâ€™t know!
