8 Month Photo Session with Snaggletooth and Sleepy Face

Description

Every month we have been taking a picture of Avery in the same chair with the same bear; nothing different.

Please, not again!!

What is different, is the level of difficulty with each passing month as Averyâ€™s mobility only gets better.

Last month, she was on the verge of crawling, and very hard to keep still as she constantly attacked her bear. This month was no different, but she was able to stabilize herself a little better. Yep, Going Mom still needed to stand by to prevent the gravity defying Avery from falling right off the chair.

Notice Mommyâ€™s safety net arm ready to catch our baby as she lunges forward in her crazed state.

Another variable I never considered is the fact that sheâ€™ll eventually have more than just a gummy smile, sheâ€™ll have teeth! This is the first month where Avery is flashing us a snaggletoothed smile with only her front top right making an appearance.

Hard to see, but itâ€™s there. She also has her two front bottom teeth cutting through, but theyâ€™re still hard to see.

Our 8 month photo session was short lived, but we successfully obtained a few good shots. The temperament of a teething baby is grab bag of emotions; you never know what youâ€™ll get from one minute to the next. First, sheâ€™s happily hugging her bear-friendâ€¦.

â€¦then itâ€™s suddenly hands-to-faceâ€¦.

â€¦and more hands-to-face, really rubbing those eyesâ€¦

â€¦â€¦oh, itâ€™s back to happiness and bear hugsâ€¦

â€¦but wait, maybe the bear said something meanâ€¦

â€¦nope, itâ€™s that damn toothâ€¦

â€¦â€¦okay, one more hug? for the bear with Mommyâ€™s supervisionâ€¦

â€¦â€¦aaaaaannnndddd, sheâ€™s spentâ€¦

â€¦now itâ€™s all business, the bear is gone.

All of this happened in the span of approximately 4 minutes. I know, itâ€™s a crazy life, huh?

As all parents already know, the randomness of our kidsâ€™ temperaments means us adults will also have a varied temperament. Guess thatâ€™s why we have our options of beer, wine, or liquor should the â€œneedâ€• arise!

I know, we never actually think we need alcohol to solve our problems, itâ€™s just fun to referenceâ€¦â€¦and drink. ðŸ˜‰

If you take frequent growth pictures of your kids or used to, what difficulties did you experience as they grew older?
