

The Toddler Trance: #MySundayPhoto â€” 05.03.15

Description

Kids and adults alike find themselves locked in a trance of deep thought almost daily. A toddler may ponder something as simple as what to make of the family pet. Itâ€™s nothing like mommy or daddy and certainly doesnâ€™t poop or eat like anyone else in the house. Well, maybeâ€¦

But as adults, we have plenty of things swarming our brains that cause us to hold a trance of perplexity as we try and make sense of it all. Iâ€™m sure for many parents, myself included, that perplexity is comprises whatâ€™s going on inside our kidsâ€™ head. Especially as toddlers when they lack the verbal skills to better relay their needs/feelings.

Anyway, what Iâ€™m getting at, is that every time I catch my daughter in deep thought like this, I canâ€™t help but to wonder what it is sheâ€™s thinking. Maybe why her bottom lip feels bigger than normal, or maybe sheâ€™s just pausing to poop in her diaper. Who knows?

Okay, Iâ€™m done being philosophical for the day. This weekâ€™s pic is the day after Avery busted her lip, hence its swollen redness, and sheâ€™s caught in a trance thinking about who knows what. Hereâ€™s the originalâ€¦ â€¦and a B&W version I probably tried to hard to edit.

I wanted to keep the color of her beautiful eyes, but fear they look more bloodshot than anything else. Regardless, the picture captures that ever-growing mind working hard, I only wish I knew for what!

Do you ever try to decipher what your kids are thinking?

How do you like the b&w with colored eyes? Would it be better just straight b&w with no color?

Date Created
2015/05/02