

Getting Over Sickness: #MySundayPhoto 04.18.15

Description

It's been a hectic week with Avery experiencing her worst sickness and fever yet. All of the life was drained out of our highly energetic toddler and all she wanted to do was have Mommy and Daddy hold her close.

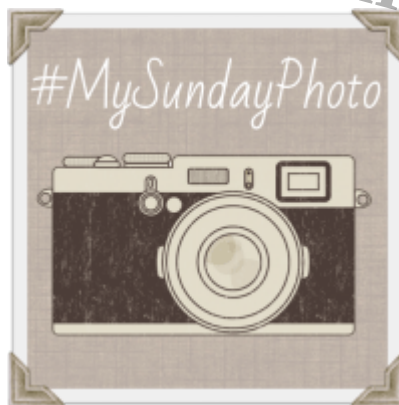

The cuddles are priceless, but never under these circumstances. Thankfully, our little girl's fever finally dropped and she gradually became her normal, crazy self. I attribute a lot of her recovery to my wife's "boob milk" because there's nothing better in terms of nutrition and comfort.

Before she was fully recovered, I was able to snap a few photos of Avery while she remained motionless. It was sad to see her this way, but at the same time, so nice to have the opportunity to take pictures of toddler that isn't constantly on-the-go! Is that wrong of me? I hope not!

Anyway, here's one close-up of I think captures the life slowly coming back into Avery. The picture isn't as clear as I'd hope, but you can almost see her recovery just from her eyes alone. No editing for this one.

Do you take advantage of cuddling with your kids when they are sick?
Have you ever used their sick, immobile state to snap a few easy pictures?
