

Weâ€™re at the Beach, Have Some Pun!

Description

At the time this is published, we should be living it up with our family at the beach North Carolina. Weâ€™re visiting the Outer Banks for the first time and, since Iâ€™m writing this before ever seeing the area, Iâ€™m hoping weâ€™re loving the area. As long as we follow the rules, all should be well.

Our plans are minimal; play in the sand (attempting to build a sand castle) and ocean, eat good seafood, and enjoy time together. Simplicity is bliss when it comes to travelling with a toddler as well as when youâ€™re at the beach and just want to relax. Weâ€™re not ones to go crazy planning things, that almost seems to add stress when there should be none!

While Iâ€™m gone, I just thought Iâ€™d share a few puns to make you laugh (or groan) since Iâ€™m sure all 5 of my followers are having pun withdrawals. And we all know, 7 days without puns makes one weak. Letâ€™s start with a beach related pun.

Hopefully, with the help of our safe sunscreen, that won't be us. As for my Uncle Paul the math teacher, spending time at the beach will just make him a tangent. Go ahead, groan it out, there's more where that came from!

- Vandalism is just a stone's throw away.
- The starving mathematician joined a free lunch program, it's the binomial distribution. Math teachers just have a lot of problems.
- The difference between a hippo and a zippo is that one's really heavy and the other is a little lighter.
- The man called someone a watering hole, but he meant well.
- The drinking club lost its members since the liters did a pour job.
- After repeated fatal accidents to his flock of sheep, the farmer was able to bring some back to life each time, but they were all rams. I guess ewe only live once.
- My blind friend saves a ton of money on his electric bill, but he never sees the savings.
- The greedy dyslexic desired fame so bad that he said he'd sell his soul to Santa.
- There was a major theft at the upholstery factory. Luckily, everything was recovered.
- The pianist locked up and started singing because he couldn't find the key.

Have a great rest of the week!

Date Created
2016/06/15