

Bear Fight in the Ninja Turtle Fort

Description

Remember Avery's tutorial on How to Fight a Bear last month? You know, instead of sitting still for us to take her 7 month photos, she decided Teddy needed to know who was boss?

It's me, I'm the boss.

We thought she made her point clear, but apparently the bear didn't learn his lesson. When word about the ninja turtle fort spread across the nursery, Teddy Bear challenged Avery to another duel on her new stomping grounds.

Being the fearless daughter of two courageous parents, Avery was quick to accept, and luckily I had the camera to catch it all on film. Is it really called film? Maybe just all on memory card? Bah, who knows?! Anyway, back to the action!

[youtube <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jqNPLqSvFOs&w=560&h=315>]

I'd say Avery made it rather clear she's a force to be reckoned with. I love her victory dance at the end; it's reminiscent of the "Halo Hump/Teabag" you would do on your fallen victims during online play.

As you might've noticed, we still have the TMNT fort standing like I first posted about on Tuesday. In that post, it seemed Avery was not enthused by the shelled superhero mutant turtles or my crafty fort, but now she's taken a liking to both!

The very next day, first thing upon waking and feeding, I got her in there for some playtime and she had a blast!

The pictures speak for themselves, huh? Now I need to find some quality TMNT toys from my childhood, the originals.

Another dad blogger commented on Tuesday's post and showed me part of his Ninja Turtle collection via instagram. Needless to say, I'm jealous.

View this post on Instagram

default watermark

Well, as you can see, I did say that! So, now I'm on the hunt to find some of the originals for myself Avery. I have no clue what I ever did with mine, and all I found in my mom's attic were old TMNT puzzles.

We did have fun putting them together that night, but I want the toys!

If you know of a person or place I should look, please let me know. As long as they aren't too pricey, I might consider getting them; after my loving breadwinner of a wife approves first! I love you, Kelley! :)

Speaking of my mom/G-Ma, we'll be going there for the 4th of July weekend, so I better start getting my food packed. I typically bring several of my own eats which includes Brussels sprouts, tuna, egg whites, a nut and seed mix, and plain Greek yogurt.

Yep, all staples in my diet! It's not that she doesn't have a lot of good, healthy food, but I always hate to take other's food (even my mom's) I guess because I know how valuable it really is.

Do you have certain foods you like to have with you wherever you go, or can you just go with whatever's available?

Date Created
2014/07/03