

Happy 1st Valentine's Day, Avery, and Kelley Too!

Description

Yep, I went with the corny heart.
#noshame

I know I complain about Avery not playing and being impatient, but I can't believe she'll be three months tomorrow, February 15th. And today is her first Valentine's.

Avery with Mommy at less than 2 weeks old.

Yeah, not really a big deal, but as I'm sure all parents know, a first anything is a landmark we MUST get excited about.

I'm running short on time today, but I wanted to post my V-day wishes to Avery and hope we can have a great one. Tomorrow we'll be visiting her grandparents from her mom's side, and it's supposed to be beautiful weather. Hoping for some nice sunshine and a great visit. I am always a little hesitant to throw her off of her routine since that makes nap time and therefore nighttime harder.

Sometimes itâ€™s not a big deal though, weâ€™ll see.

Speaking of sleep, instead of the normal swaddle with snaps that we have been using, we tried the Woombie we bought a while back. I also used the advice from this video on YouTube for the inside layer to keep her arms down. This is a perfect combo! No more snaps coming undone either since the Woombie zips up!

Keeping those crazy arms down is a chore, and so far so good. Avery even slept in her crib from 9pm to 5am, thatâ€™s the longest yet! High five us! But I wonâ€™t get too excited until itâ€™s consistent.

Crazy arms in action. So freakinâ€™ cute though!

Well, thatâ€™s it for today, I hope everyone has a wonderful Valentineâ€™s Day and great weekend ahead. Iâ€™m excited weâ€™ll have Kelley at home for an extra day, we sure do miss mommy around here!

Do you get overexcited about counting 1stâ€™s for your baby? Whatâ€™s the most random first you can remember?

Date Created
2014/02/14